Very strong and potentially damaging winds associated with Storm Ciarán are possible on Thursday.

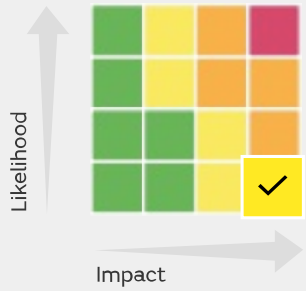
What to expect

- There is a slight chance that damage to buildings and homes could occur, with roofs blown off and power lines brought down
- There is a small chance that flying debris will result in a danger to life
- There is a small chance that injuries and danger to life could occur from large waves and beach material being thrown onto sea fronts, coastal roads and properties
- There is a small chance that roads, bridges and railway lines could close, with delays and cancellations to bus, train, ferry services and flights

Further details

Storm Ciarán is likely to bring a spell of very strong winds to southern parts of the UK. Winds are expected to gust 50-60 mph along coasts, and may reach 70-80 mph at times along the English Channel coast of England as well as north Cornwall. There is a very low likelihood that of gusts up to 90mph could affect the far west of Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly. Inland, gusts are likely to reach 40-50 mph at times, with a possibility of 60-70 mph gusts over high ground such as Dartmoor.

Very large waves could bring additional impacts to coastal areas, especially parts of west and south Wales, and southern England.



✓ Very low likelihood of high impacts
